WHAT YOUR COLLEAGES SAY

"ReLeah's ability to work with and inspire teachers is unique. And her grasp of literacy-based instruction is inspirational. I am developing as a literacy principal and she has truly become my driving force in this endeavor."

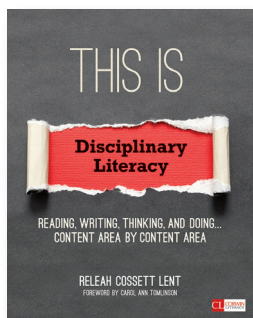

—Middle School Principal
Massachusetts

"In my 13 years of teaching, Tuesday's workshop with ReLeah Lent was the best. It wasn't about nuts and bolts; it was about educating our students."

—High school English Teacher
Florida

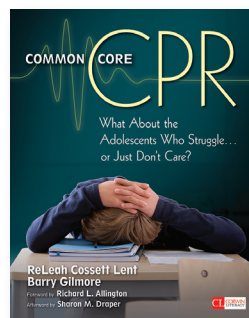

"The year-long literacy project with ReLeah Lent is, I believe, one of the best projects that the Department of Education has ever funded. I still get comments from teachers about how beneficial it was and how it changed the way they thought about reading instruction as well as how they delivered it."

Disciplinary Literacy: Deeper Learning Within the Disciplines

ReLeah helps content teachers explore why students need to understand how historians, novelists, mathematicians, and scientists use literacy in their respective fields and shows how to teach students to:

- Evaluate and question evidence (Science)
- Compare sources and interpret events (History)
- Favor accuracy over elaboration (Math)
- Attune to voice and figurative language (ELA)

Growing Literacy Leaders from Within

ReLeah shows teachers how to break down barriers that exist between departments and form strong, sustainable learning communities with content-area literacy as a foundation. Participants will create a customized plan which will help lead to improved student achievement, greater teacher engagement, and increased collaboration.

Engagement: The Key to Literacy. . . and Learning

Research shows that engagement is the factor that leads to increased student outcomes; in fact, it connects to achievement more strongly than home environment. Join ReLeah Lent, author of This Is Disciplinary Literacy, for the latest research on engagement, along with strategies and practices to motivate learners in all disciplines.

Say What? Using Inquiry and Problem Solving for Deep Learning

When students tap into curiosity, ownership, and the challenge of solving a problem, they learn how to learn. What's more, they remember what they learn. Explore with ReLeah strategies and classroom practices that begin with inquiry, move into intrinsic motivation, and end with sustainable and deep learning.
